Redfin Reports Homebuying and Selling Activity Show Signs of Life Amid Lower Mortgage Rates

The weekly average mortgage rate fell to a 3-year low, nudging some house hunters and sellers off the sidelines

SEATTLE — Jan. 22, 2026 — U.S. pending home sales fell 2.9% year over year during the four weeks ending January 18, the smallest decline in over a month, as mortgage rates declined. That's according to a new report from Redfin, the real estate brokerage powered by Rocket.

New listings followed a similar pattern as pending sales: They dipped 1.6% year over year, the smallest decline since November. Mortgage-purchase applications rose 5% week over week to their highest level in three years.

The slight improvements in homebuying demand and home listings are largely the result of falling mortgage rates. The weekly average mortgage rate dropped to a three-year low of 6.06% last week after President Trump ordered \$200 billion in mortgage bond purchases. Lower mortgage rates have brought the median U.S. monthly housing payment down to $2,441, a 6.3% decline from this time last year. (The daily average rate has increased from a 3-year low of about 6% in early January to 6.2% this week.)

Even though homebuying and selling activity improved, the homes that are selling are taking a long time to find buyers. The typical home that sold spent 61 days on the market before going under contract, a week longer than last year. That's largely because it's a buyer's market, with home sellers outnumbering buyers by a record margin; many buyers are taking their time with both house hunting and negotiations.

"Buyers have much more power than they've had over the past few years," said Ben Ambroch, a Redfin Premier agent in Milwaukee. "A lot of buyers are giving up a 3% mortgage rate for a 6% rate, so they have high standards for their new home. Buyers are negotiating prices and asking for repairs based on inspections. Sellers are more willing to compromise because listings have been sitting on the market longer; the sellers who need to move are eager to get a deal done."
